Our research set out to find descendants of Powell Green of Warren County, North Carolina, who was the victim of lynching. Early in the semester, we focused on the Kearney side of the family tree, and worked via Facebook and online ancestry sites to form solid connections. We were able to find a descendant named Dana who agreed to speak with us about meaningful topics such as her experience as black woman, her proudest accomplishments in life, and the example she hopes to set for young black youth. Beyond our research, our group formed a meaningful bond within itself, which allowed us to open up and speak to each other with vulnerability, respect, and understanding.
